University plans fundraising campaign

Carleton University is planning to embark upon a major fundraising campaign in the coming year. The reason is simple. To excel nationally requires more money than we get from government grants and tuition fees. It requires commitment and support from the community, from the corporate sector, from alumni, and from our friends.

Through this campaign, our goal is to ensure that these groups fully appreciate Carleton's strengths and needs, and that they understand how their support will contribute to making Carleton an even better university. So, how do we hope to achieve this?

We have consulted widely with people, both on and off campus, to get a good sense of their ideas, hopes, and needs. As a result, we learned that this campaign will have to be for more than bricks and mortar—it will have to include support for endowed chairs, scholarships, equipment and other academic projects.

In our planning, we have been guided by recommendations flowing from the President's Commission on Carleton's Second Half-Century. In fact, this campaign will take up the Commission's challenge to develop our major strengths and opportunities, rather than to attempt to address a limitless range of needs.

Consequently, our campaign will focus on a number of areas in which Carleton is a recognized leader and for which there is a broad level of support:

Environmental programs - Carleton is unique in having environmental undergraduate degree programs within all of its faculties. To build on these strengths, we need support for human and physical resources.

Global competitiveness - Carleton is committed to helping achieve more effective teaching and research in the international field, including study abroad terms.

Advancement of education through technology - Carleton plays a leading role in this area, to provide individuals with better opportunities to pursue a university education.

Equity and access to opportunity - Carleton wishes to better accommodate those in under-represented groups who have the ability and desire to learn.

Alumni will be learning more about these and other aspects of the campaign as our planning phase comes to an end. We look forward to your continued support as we begin this crucial new initiative.

Robin H. Farquhar

President, Carleton University

Be proud of your school

One of the best things that we, as alumni, can give to Carleton is our personal expression of pride in the University and what it stands for. By letting our friends, colleagues and family know what a great university Carleton is, we help to build its image and reputation in the community. And there's certainly lots to boast about.

Consider this list of faculty and students at Carleton who have won major awards over the past year:

- Charlene Porsild, a doctoral student in history, won the Petro-Canada Fullbright Scholarship.
- Brian Burns, an industrial design professor, and Don Westwood, an architecture professor, won an ACTRA award for a seven-part educational series on TV-Ontario.
- Ken Storey, a professor of biology, chemistry and biochemistry, won the prestigious Killam Award for his research.
- Margaret Ogilvie, a law professor, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada.
- Phil Sharp, an architecture professor, was awarded a Citation of Excellence from the American Institute of Architects for a housing complex he designed for the environmentally sensitive.

• Geza Kardos, an engineering professor, won the Whighton Fellowship in Engineering for pioneering the use of case studies in design workshops.

• Jill Vickers, a professor of political science and Canadian studies, won the Sarah Shorten Award for outstanding achievement in the advancement of women in Canadian universities.

• Students in sociology and anthropology won a record number of Ontario Graduate Scholarships and SSHRC awards.

• Michael Britton, an engineering student, won one of four Fressenden-Trott Scholarships.

• Marilyn Johnson, an engineering student, received the Canadian Engineering Memorial Foundation Fellowship for combining academic standing with the promotion of engineering as a profession among high school students.

• Don Wigfield, a professor of chemistry, received a teaching award from the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Associations.

This is just a small sample of the people who make Carleton great, and who give us every reason to be proud of the University today. So next time you have a chance, do a bit of bragging. It helps boost the University and, best of all, it doesn't cost a cent!

Alumni help guide Carleton's future

by Maureen O'Neil

Alumni were major contributors to the President's Commission on the Second-Half Century. Six commissioners and two staff were Carleton graduates (see box). Before assuming the Chair of the Commission, I was the co-chair with our late Chancellor, the Honourable Pauline Jewett until, sadly, she was unable to come to meetings. However, she stayed closely in touch with the substance of our work, literally, until the day she died.

The Commission's mandate was "to study and seek consensus, through University-wide consultations, on the character and purpose of Carleton University and to develop guidelines for future policies, plans and decisions."

The Commission identified four fundamental values that have been the pillars of Carleton's foundation since 1942 and upon which, the Commission believes, Carleton's future must be built. These are: a commitment to excellence in scholarship; providing equity in education; maintaining a space of tolerance and openness; and developing partnerships and links which extend beyond the campus.

Commission members, in addition to representing the various "estates" of the University, captured countervailing views of what the University has been or ought to become. All sides of current debates were represented. Presentations and briefs to us put on the table the sharp choices the University faces.

The Commission came to consensus on the text and recommendations. We were significantly helped in coming to this consensus because we were able to marry numbers to our policy discussions.

The Commission debated at length the issue of "accessibility." Accessibility has been Carleton's watchword - but the numbers produced for us show very clearly that students who have not shone academically in high school are not all late bloomers. However, around 40 per cent do meet program standards in their first year. Entry for a wide range of students was seen as a financial necessity for Carleton as well as an egalitarian policy. As you will see by the recommendations, we are proposing to change the opportunities for them. Changing doesn't mean no more second chances for high schoolers who just have not got down to their studies, whatever the reason. It will mean more focused attention on them - a "Challenge College" was proposed. This could be highly innovative in terms of approaches not only in student selection but also in terms of instructional programs and services.

Carleton has always defined itself as an institution which reaches out to people of any age or background who want to learn. The Commission members were touched by the excellent film Carleton on the Move about Carleton's early days. It reminded us that since the beginning there were visible numbers of women, and people from different racial backgrounds at Carleton. And everyone didn't come straight from high school. Indeed Carleton was created to, among other things, provide opportunities to people who wanted to study as well as work. Two recommendations address directly the issues that now face us as the campus becomes even more multi-racial. One deals with the need for fair and effective complaint procedures and the second addresses the issue of adjustment of curricula to accommodate intellectual, theoretical and instructional diversity and change in disciplines.

A dedication to excellence in both research and education was reaffirmed throughout the Commission proceedings. The Commission emphasized that the notion of a general education should be embedded in the curriculum across units and that "first year or foundation year courses should be in the hands of and taught directly by the best faculty Carleton has to offer."

Improved research facilities, including of course the library, are essential if excellence in scholarship, whether by faculty or students is to be achieved. The Commission stressed that Carleton must look to the public (and alumni) for financial support.

In the last chapter, the Commission talked about controlling growth, developing effective mechanisms for planning, ensuring transparent, equitable and participatory decision making, and generating a sound financial structure. These are ideas which I know the President is already addressing.

We, as alumni, can be proud that we are part of a university community with excellent faculty respected in their disciplines, part of a university that has been a leader in pushing for equity on campus (Carleton has pioneered access for the disabled), and is working diligently to address the very contentious issues which must be tackled in creating an atmosphere for teaching and learning that respects differences but does not atomize or fracture that community.

The Commission tried very hard to be practical in suggesting ways recommendations might be carried out. Just as in the public and private sector, the financial squeeze will force all of us to think clearly about our role as alumni in the "structural adjustments" Carleton must undertake to ensure all four pillars of equity, excellence, openness and tolerance, and partnerships are strong enough to support the next half-century.

New names for building, institute

Carleton's Administration Building and Institute of Women's Studies acquired new names last fall.

A recommendation from President Robin Farquhar was approved by the Board of Governors to name the Administration Building Robertson Hall in honour of Carleton's fifth Chancellor, the Honourable Gordon Robertson.

Dr. Farquhar says it is particularly fitting that the Administration Building be named after Mr. Robertson.

"It was in this building that we witnessed his skill and wisdom at problem solving, and saw him use his expert diplomatic skills in welcoming guests," he said. "It was on the lawn behind this building that he so warmly congratulated many thousands of students at Convocation.

"Naming the building after this great Canadian will serve as a continuing reminder to its occupants that civility, grace, knowledge and hard work are the skills of the expert administrator, and will maintain for years to come this University's acknowledged debt to the Honourable Gordon Robertson."

Mr. Robertson's association with Carleton began in the early 1960s, when he was elected a member of the Board of Governors, a role in which he served continuously from October 1962 to September 1971.

In 1980, he was selected as Chancellor of the University. He served in that position for the maximum term and later, upon the untimely death of Pauline Jewett, he accepted the appointment as the University's first Chancellor Emeritus, presiding over two Convocation ceremonies in that capacity.

Mr. Robertson had a long and distinguished career in the public service, in which he provided advice and counsel to five prime ministers.

He joined the Department of External Affairs in 1941, and served in a variety of capacities, including Secretary to the Office of the Prime Minister; Deputy Minister, Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources and Commissioner of the Northwest Territories; Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary of the Cabinet; and Secretary of the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Upon his retirement, he was appointed President of the Institute for Research on Public Policy, a position he held for four years. He also served as a Fellow in Carleton's Institute of Canadian Studies, and has received many honours in recognition of his service and contributions to Canada.

Pauline Jewett remembered by Institute of Women's Studies

"...In memory of Pauline Jewett's social activism, feminism and commitment to social justice, equality and inclusiveness..."

With these words, faculty and students voted to rename Carleton's Institute of Women's Studies after Pauline Jewett, who died in 1992 of cancer. The feeling was that Jewett's ideals and actions made her a fitting model for the activities of the Institute.

"The reflection of her ideals is very much in keeping with the ongoing work of the Institute," says Fran Klodawsky, the current director. "We place these commitments in an academic context not only with regard to sexism, but also other kinds of discrimination, such as homophobia and racism."

Jewett's longtime connection with Carleton began in 1955, when she came to the University as a professor in political science. She was the Director of the Institute of Canadian Studies from 1967-'72, when she left Carleton to run in the federal election as an NDP candidate. She was named President of Simon Fraser University in 1974, a post she held until 1978, when she won a seat in the House of Commons as the NDP member from New Westminster-Coquitlam (1979-'88).

She returned to Carleton in 1990, when she was named the University's sixth Chancellor, a post she held until her death. Her contributions to the academic and political life of Canada were recognized by an appointment to the Privy Council in 1992.

Women's Studies at Carleton has grown significantly in the past several years, with almost 400 students enrolled in the first-year course this September, and a growing number of majors and honours students in the combined degree programs. As the number of new students coming into the programs increase, Professor Klodawsky is glad to see that Pauline Jewett will have a place in their studies.

"It was quite a shock to some of us when discussions began that undergraduate students didn't know of her," she says. "It's amazing how quickly we lose our history. That really brought home the significance of naming the Institute after Dr. Jewett."

Engineering research chair established

A new Industrial Research Chair in Performance Engineering of Real-Time Software has been established at Carleton University to "attack the problems of software performance," says its first incumbent, Professor Murray Woodside of the Systems and Computer Engineering Department.

The information generated by his research will be used to improve the design and capacity of telephone switching systems, point-of-sale software (used at retail check-out counters), airline reservation systems, and similar systems.

Such information is of vital interest to companies like Bell Canada, Bell Northern Research, Gandalf Technologies and DY-4 Systems which, as members of the Ottawa-Carleton Research Institute (OCRI), have donated $477,600 over five years to the new Chair.

When it comes to products made by these companies, "the customer is paying for capacity," says Professor Woodside. "Capacity is worth money; performance is worth money. What we can do is help design a high value product with higher performance."

In addition to OCRI's donation, $718,400 over five years has been granted to the new Chair by the federal Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. With another $50,000 from Carleton, the value of this new post comes to more than $1.2 million—over half of which is earmarked for research.

Four researchers will be associated with the chair in addition to Dr. Woodside. While industry will benefit from the success of their work, so too will Carleton.

"We hope to do 'absolutely best-in-the-world' research in this field and make the University known for it," says Professor Woodside.

"We want to attract top students into our undergraduate and graduate programs, and doing front line research is the key to achieving that goal."

Students stand to benefit from the program too, since companies like BNR and Gandalf are looking for people trained in performance engineering.

The bottom line is that this chair will provide benefits for all of the players involved: business and academia; professors and students.

Memorial tributes

Bob Wake

Bob Wake, former Chair of the psychology department, died on November 16, 1993. Born in Knoxville, Tennessee, on September 21, 1914, Bob came to Canada in 1925. Following war service with the RCAF, he attended McGill, receiving his PhD in 1950 in Adolescent Psychology. In 1952, he joined the staff of Carleton College as the first full-time faculty member in psychology and the first chair of the department. He remained chair until his sabbatical leave in 1961-'62, when R.A. Wendt succeeded him. In 1968, Bob moved to St. Patrick's College, where he established the community-based program in psychology and started the program in criminology. He retired in 1981.

Bob was a developmental and community psychologist and, for years in the Ottawa community, his name was synonymous with psychology at Carleton. His connections in the community were numerous, including the schools, the courts, and such agencies as the Council on Aging, and the Youth Services Bureau. With many of these groups, he led the way and then got younger members of the department involved. He was also a founding member and first president of the Canada Council on Smoking and Health, and his model program there has invoked worldwide admiration.

Rusty Wendt

Rusty Wendt, former Dean of Social Sciences, died on November 26, 1993. Born in Edberg, Alberta, on March 15, 1917, Rusty taught in Alberta public schools in the '30s, and received his BA from the University of Alberta in 1942. Following war service, he received his MA from Alberta, did further graduate work at McGill, and psychological research with the army. He was involved with Carleton as a sessional lecturer from 1950-'57, when he became the second full-time member of the psychology department.

Rusty became chair of the department in 1961, a position he held until 1970. In 1964, he was appointed the first Dean of Students at Carleton. In 1970, following a heart attack, he gave up the psychology chair, but in 1971, having recovered, became Dean of Arts. With the separation of the two divisions of the Faculty in 1976, he became the first Dean of Social Sciences. He retired from the University in 1982.

During his term as chair, the psychology doctoral program was established (1966), and the first psychology PhD granted (1968). His administrative skills had much to do with the expansion of the department to its position as the largest department at Carleton.

Phyllis Wilson

Phyllis Wilson, a retired professor in the School of Journalism and Communication, died on January 3, 1994 at the age of 76.

After graduating from Queen's with a BA in history and English in 1940, she joined the Ottawa Journal as a reporter, working under the legendary editor, I. Norman Smith. From 1945-'47, she served as the French embassy's information officer, but returned to newspapering in 1948 as a reporter and copy editor for the Ottawa Citizen.

She began teaching at Carleton as a sessional lecturer while reporting for the Citizen, but in 1966, joined the School as its fourth full-time member. By the time of her retirement in 1982, she had become identified with two aspects of the School - second-year print reporting, and jobs coordinator. In both, she excelled.

Her skills as a teacher not only won her one of the Arts Faculty's first teaching awards, but was also recognized in the early 1980s when Today, the now-defunct weekend newspaper magazine - named her as one of Canada's top 11 professors.

Carleton's 100th Convocation

Fall Convocation ceremonies, held on November 14, gave one potential Carleton student a taste of what it feels like to be a graduate. Wendy Klein, who was graduating in Engineering, and her husband Gabriel Warshaw, BEng/90, made a cap and gown for their daughter Haley (Engineering 2015?). Other highlights included the awarding of an honorary Doctor of Science degree to Roberta Bondar, physician, scientist and astronaut, and an honorary Doctor of Literature degree to P.B. Waite, Emeritus Professor of History at Dalhousie University. More than 800 students graduated last fall. A total of 17 PhDs, 248 Masters degrees and diplomas, 530 Bachelors degrees, and 15 certificates were earned.

Two Carleton alumni in Cabinet

Carleton is well represented in Jean Chrétien's Cabinet with two alumni holding cabinet posts.

John Manley, who graduated in 1971 with a bachelor's degree in mathematics and political science, is the new Minister of Industry, and Senator Joyce Fairbairn, who received a Bachelor of Journalism degree in 1961, is the Leader of the Government in the Senate and Minister with Special Responsibility for Literacy.

Mr. Manley has been the MP for Ottawa South since 1988, and has held many responsibilities within the Liberal caucus. Before entering politics, he was a partner in an Ottawa law firm, and active in many local organizations.

Senator Fairbairn was appointed to the Senate for the Province of Alberta in 1984. She is an active advocate for the cause of literacy in Canada, was a founding member of the Senate Standing Committee on Aboriginal Peoples, and in 1990, was inducted into the Kainai Chieftainship of the Blood Nation.

New Dean of Social Sciences

Tom Wilkinson, Assistant Vice-President (Student Services) has been named as the new Dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences. He will replace Dr. Marilyn Marshall, who steps down on June 30 of this year.

Dr. Wilkinson came to Carleton in 1966 as a lecturer in geography, was made an assistant professor in 1967, and an associate professor in 1973. He served as chair of the Geography Department from 1976-'78 and 1981-'85, at which time he became director of the School of Continuing Education. He was appointed assistant vice-president in 1992.

Carleton participates in video trial

Carleton University, the University of Ottawa, and Stentor, the alliance of Canada's major telephone companies, have teamed up to test Video on Demand (VOD), a new learning tool made possible through advances in telecommunications technology.

VOD allows users to select a video program from an on-screen menu and have it transmitted over the existing telephone network to their personal computer or television with full 'VCR-like' controls.

At Carleton, approximately 400 students enrolled in the second-year philosophy course, "Introduction to Symbolic Logic," will have access to VOD workstations in the library. Students will be able to access weekly lectures from these terminals without the bottlenecks of the manual tape distribution system, where tapes can be unavailable or out of stock.

Because videos are stored on the server in digital form, multiple users can simultaneously access a video program, and have full control over playback of the program while network capacity is freed for other users.

Students in the VOD trial will be able to view or review course lectures whenever they like, as well as accelerate their progress through the course if they choose. They will also have the benefit of other computer applications, such as word processing and spreadsheets, while they are viewing the taped lectures.

Participating students at the University of Ottawa are enrolled in a communications technology course, which has been specifically designed around the VOD system, and will access digitized video lectures and research material, as well as 40 National Film Board titles.

The five-month trial is the most technologically advanced of its kind in the world. The test with actual users will allow Stentor to evaluate the system. The two universities will benefit by providing added convenience to students, while also examining the potential to reduce costs associated with maintaining cumbersome videotape libraries.

The VOD trial in Ottawa will be expanded in mid-1994 to include health care applications with Mentor Networks Corporation. Stentor hopes the trials will lead to the introduction of a VOD service for business customers within two years.

Carleton forms joint venture with Ottawa Heart Institute

Carleton University and the University of Ottawa Heart Institute have launched an ongoing joint venture that is aimed at enhancing both heart medicine and the education of Carleton graduate students.

Under the arrangement, Carleton is supplying graduate students, faculty support, and basic research for projects funded by the Heart Institute. From Carleton's perspective "the Heart Institute has equipment and expertise that a university just doesn't have," says Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering professor Donald Russell. "We can use them in a variety of ways to help us with our research."

To date, two projects have been started under the joint venture.

The first is aimed at developing a 'non-microelectronic controller' for artificial hearts. The problem being addressed is that current artificial hearts rely heavily on "lots and lots" of microelectronic components, says Professor Russell, who is heading the project with graduate student Sean Tay. Any single one of them can fail and cause the whole device to fail, with potentially fatal consequences for the patient, he explains. His goal is to explore simple, reliable, and non-electronic ways to control artificial hearts.

The other project is exploring the effects of cryogenic storage on certain blood vessel cells that sometimes attract blood clots, which in turn can lead to strokes.

Professors Ken Storey, and Nathalie Chaly are involved with this project, along with graduate student Michael Lowry. Says Professor Storey, "If we can find out how these cells work, how we can control them, how we can regulate them with temperature, or maybe even how cryopreservation could be used to kill these cells, we will then be able to look at one of the key mechanisms in strokes."

Corel Systems donates equipment

by Tambrae Knapp

For the second time in a year, Corel Systems of Ottawa has come to Carleton's aid by giving two truckloads of computer equipment to the University's Faculty of Engineering.

The donation from the graphics powerhouse (maker of the world-renowned 'CorelDRAW!') includes recent-generation IBM platform and Macintosh platform equipment, says Dean of Engineering Malcom Bibby.

"But there's much more to it than that," he says. "There's specialised equipment, good monitors, CD-ROM drives, and software that will help us a great deal with the undergraduate laboratories. This is an area where we have major difficulties in getting funding and equipping the undergraduate labs and computer facilities. That's why it's appreciated so much."

Professor Bibby says the Corel donation will allow Engineering "to modernize our undergraduate educational process to a great extent." For example, before this equipment arrived, the Faculty had about 10 CD-ROM drives. With this donation, that number changes to 110.

As a software leader, Corel requires the most current technology, and sometimes ends up with equipment that is not up-to-date enough by the time it is delivered. That is why some of the equipment in Corel's donation has not even been opened. There is also hardware and software that, while not the latest version, is still more current than the aging computer equipment that the Faculty of Engineering, like many departments, does not have enough money to update.

As before, this donation was coordinated by Warren Hik, the Faculty's software consultant. Says Professor Bibby, "Warren is the person who made the contacts with Corel. That's why the thing has gone so smoothly."

Corel's generosity to Carleton dates back many years. Each year they have contributed the latest version of CorelDRAW! (versions one, two and three) to the University for use by students and faculty in the Faculty of Engineering. In return, Corel receives recognition and useful feedback on how the programs could be improved. In fact, Industrial Design students working with Professor Brian Burns have been involved in making recommendations for the new version five of 'CorelDRAW!', which is due out this May.

This collaboration paid off even more significantly for Carleton when Corel decided to donate some used and redundant equipment to the Faculty of Engineering last fall. Corel was so impressed with Carleton's use of the equipment that they made this second donation when more equipment became available.

What impressed Corel was Carleton's ingenuity in restoring equipment to working order that might otherwise have been scrapped

"Somehow, they work miracles," says Warren Hik of the staff in the Engineering Technical Centre-Electronics who make the repairs. "Using old diagnostic equipment and working without schematics, they can find a malfunctioning $4 part in a $2,000 piece of equipment."

That kind of work is so labour intensive that the cost of having the equipment repaired commercially is often equal to the value of the equipment. While upgrading to new equipment is a wiser option for companies like Corel, the efficiency of the ETC-Electronics technicians makes repairing the equipment cost-effective for the University.

Once the donated equipment has been inspected and any necessary repairs have been made, it will be used to upgrade the facilities in the undergraduate computer labs in Engineering and the Schools of Architecture and Industrial Design. The new equipment will not only improve the day-to-day conditions for students and faculty, says Professor Bibby, "this will act as an advantage for our students in equipping them to work in modern industry."

An added bonus is two disk duplicators that were included in the donation. "These should benefit the University as a whole with our site licensed software," says Hik. "Currently, someone has to duplicate disks for site licensed software individually. These machines do it automatically, they are big time savers, and look to be in good condition. After we check them out, they'll be given to Computing and Communication Services for university-wide use."

Carleton acquires rare German collection

A unique collection of works in early 19th century German literature is coming to Carleton.

A major grant of $10,000 has been awarded to the MacOdrum Library by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRCC) to enable the Library to purchase a significant subset of the Corvey Library Microfiche Edition.

Carleton is the first university in Canada to acquire this important research collection. The fact that SSHRCC made the award to the MacOdrum Library indicates that Carleton is recognized as a centre for research in German, says Dr. Arnd Bohm, of Carleton's Department of German.

"No library can have everything," he says, "but our German holdings can hold their own with any Canadian university."

Owned by Franz Albrecht Metternich-Sandor, Prinz von Ratibor and Corvey, the Corvey Library is included in the list of German national cultural monuments.

The complete library contains some 33,700 titles in 67,00 volumes of fiction and nonfiction, with in-depth coverage of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It has survived the upheavals of war intact, and contains numerous rare and extremely rare items.

Assembled by Graf Victor Amadeus von Hesse-Rotenburg during the first half of the 19th century, the collection offers a comprehensive survey of the literature in various fields of knowledge. It includes the main literary genres and topics popular at the time, such as historical and exotic literature, gothic novels, family and society novels, stories of romance, the supernatural, and secret societies.

Early findings indicate that the Corvey Library offers an untapped wealth of information for political and social historians, art historians, literary scholars, anthropologists, and language historians.

The proposal to purchase the collection for Carleton was prepared by Dr. Bohm and Erika Fuerst, from the Reader Services Division of the Library, and was based on documentation obtained from the Acquisitions and Systems Department of the Library. It is hoped that access to this 19th century collection will increase the usefulness of the German collection for students and scholars from many places and in different fields of research.

Patricia Allen Memorial Scholarships established to aid research into violence against women

At a press conference on Parliament Hill December 20, Industry Minister John Manley, BA/71, and Ottawa City Councillor James Watson, BA/83, presented the inaugural Patricia Allen Memorial Research Scholarships to four graduate students who are conducting research into the causes of, and ways to prevent, incidents of spousal violence.

Patricia Allen, 31, was killed with a crossbow by her estranged husband on November 13, 1991. Her friends, family and colleagues have established the Patricia Allen Memorial Fund to support scholarly research which will contribute to the prevention of such tragedies in the future.

The scholarship recipients were Carleton University students Gregory Kerry and Neil Slattery, and York University students Noreen Stuckless and Tracey Smith. Gregory Kerry, a doctoral student in psychology, is conducting an empirical study of men who kill their partners to determine whether there are distinct personality and behavioural characteristics which differentiate men who kill their intimate partners from other men; Neil Slattery, a master's student in sociology, is working on a research thesis aimed at helping to explain the low number of breach of probation charges against 'domestic assault' offenders within the correctional system; Noreen Stuckless, a doctoral student in psychology, is studying the motivation for abuse, especially vengeance, reports of abuse and fairness of treatment, and the efficacy of seeking help; and Tracey Smith, a doctoral student in sociology, is investigating how language facilitates sexual and physical violence in heterosexual dating relationships.

The trustees of the Patricia Allen Memorial Fund, a registered Canadian charity, established the fund in the spring of 1992 to discover why spousal violence exists and persists, and to identify the forces at work in spousal relationships which give rise to conflicts leading to spousal violence. Their hope is that by supporting research and education, spousal violence will be reduced and, one day, eradicated.

Carleton remembers Joe MacDonald

by Brian Pagan

During the early morning hours of October 7, 1993 Constable Joe MacDonald of the Sudbury Regional Police Force was shot and killed while on duty. The murder of a Police Officer crystallizes fears that ours is becoming an increasingly violent and brutal society. The impact is magnified when the victim is a friend. Many of us shared the sorrow of Joe's family and police colleagues that day.

Joe MacDonald enrolled at Carleton University in 1984 and graduated with a Bachelors degree in Sociology in 1988. During his years at Carleton, Joe met his future wife Nancy Fragomeni, BA/86, shared in the camaraderie of teammates as a four-year starter on the Ravens football team and befriended just about every person he met.

Joe earned a starting role with the Ravens in his first year as an offensive tackle, a position that brought him into prominence as the nucleus of the famous "McHogs."

The talented MacDonald, along with Kevin McKerrow, BAHons/87, Kerry McKowell, BA/86, Angus "Mc" Donnelly and Ron "Mc" Wilson formed an imposing offensive line that allowed Ravens running back Mark Brown, BA/91, to establish a league rushing record that still stands.

Ravens assistant coach Gary Shaver says that "Joe and the McHogs were a key element" of the 1985 Ravens team that won the OQIFC Championship and advanced to within one win of the Vanier Cup. In his final season of 1987, Joe served as team captain and was named an OQIFC All-Star.

Steve Fretwell, BA/89, who joined the Ravens as quarterback in 1986, also benefitted from the presence of Joe and the McHogs. "He saved my McButt many times. I think I was only sacked four times all year", recalls Fretwell. Fretwell remembers Joe as a "genuinely nice guy" who went out of his way to help people and his teammates.

Coach Shaver says that beyond his obvious athletic abilities, Joe contributed to the winning atmosphere in the Ravens locker room because "he was so happy-go-lucky and easy going in nature that he naturally boosted the spirits of everyone around him."

Coach Shaver also remembers that Joe had a goal beyond university. "From the day he arrived, Joe wanted to graduate and become a policeman."

After graduating in 1988, Joe joined the Sudbury Regional Police Force. For Joe, serving his community was the attainment of a long-cherished dream.

Consistent with his kind and gentle disposition, Joe quickly became known on the Force as "the Gentle Giant." His five years as a police officer were filled with charity events and volunteer activities such as participation in the Police Buddy Program for disadvantaged children.

Joe's untimely death shocked and disturbed many people. His funeral mass was held in an overflowing church and was attended by Premier Bob Rae and more than one thousand police officers from across Canada.

The senselessness of the tragedy and the incomprehension of his loss left many people feeling inadequate and sad, but determined that his name and good deeds would live on.

At Carleton, this determination sparked the development of a fund to establish an annual bursary in Joe's name. Coach Shaver and former teammate Kevin McKerrow coordinated the efforts of other teammates who wanted to somehow honour Joe.

With the support of Joe's wife Nancy "The Joe MacDonald Me-memorial Fund" was established with the objective of providing a bursary to be granted yearly to a deserving Carleton student in financial need. In recognition of Joe's roots, the bursary will be awarded to a resident of the Sudbury region studying in the Arts and Social Sciences program at Carleton.

Charitable donations to this fund are tax deductible. Alumni interested in making a donation to the endowment should send a cheque payable to the "Joe MacDonald Memorial Fund" to: Development and Alumni Services, Room 510, Robertson Hall, Carleton University, 1125 Colonel By Drive, K1S 5B6.

In a world that has too few nice guys, Joe's death is a terrible loss. He is survived by his wife Nancy and daughters Melissa, aged three, and Julie aged 8 months.

Brian Pagan, BPA 87, MA 92, is a Procurement Manager with the Department of National Defence in Ottawa. He was born and raised in Sudbury and went to grade school, high school and Carleton with Joe MacDonald.

Something to cheer about

by Richard Austen

Chances are, if you're like most people, you won't be able to name Carleton's varsity sports teams, other than football and basketball.

Yet the University sponsors a total of 17 teams in men's and women's sports, covering everything from fencing to rowing, and has even become a provincial leader in some areas.

Since 1971-'72, when the Ontario Universities Athletics Association (OUAA; OWIAA for women) was formed, Carleton has fielded 16 provincial championship teams.

Leading the way has been the women's Nordic ski team, with seven championships in the past 18 years (including four in the past five years). Rhonda de Long, BScHons/89, Sonya Skinner, BEng/92, and Miriam Tyson, BAHons/93, are some of the outstanding athletes who have brought glory, if not fame, to Carleton on the ski trails. But they haven't been alone.

The women's waterpolo team has won two provincial championships in its four years of existence; and although men's soccer has won only one championship, they've almost never missed the playoffs.

While Carleton's established teams strive for excellence in their respective sports, every year, four to five requests are received in the Department of Athletics to establish new teams - for everything from sky diving to ultimate frisbee.

Striking a balance between having too many teams or too few teams is a delicate task for the department's director, Keith Harris.

On the one hand, budgets and facilities are limiting factors, he says, while, on the other hand, the department is supported by student fees so it can't just turn down every request that comes in.

Over the years a series of guidelines has been developed against which any request for varsity status is measured.

These include:

- availability of essential resources, including the ability to accommodate the sport on campus, having adequate funding to equip, transport and accommodate the team for a five year period, and ability to provide administrative support within the department;

- establishing that the sport and most training for the sport can take place on campus, usually during the academic year, at a higher level than is available elsewhere in the community;

- and ensuring that coaches and leadership are readily available.

The department also strives to provide a balance between men's and women's sports, with women getting one additional sport than men since football is counted as being the equivalent of two sports.

Currently, says Mr. Harris, the University is about at the mid-point in Ontario in terms of the number of teams it sponsors. At one extreme is Queen's, with more than 40 teams, and at the other extreme are universities like Lakehead, with only four teams.

He doubts there will be any new teams at Carleton in the foreseeable future, since there simply aren't enough facilities--from gym time to lockers--to accommodate them.

As it is, about 325 athletes participate in varsity sports, 125 of whom are women. Being a varsity athlete isn't easy.

Gail Blake, assistant director for inter-collegiate women's sports, says that athletes who aspire to play on a varsity team have to come ready to play. Gone are the days when you could get into shape early in the season, she says.

"The coaches will pick the best players and focus on developing the team. They don't want to spend time on getting the players into shape."

Once on a team, students can expect to practise or train two hours a day, six days a week.

Helen Collins, a third-year journalism student on this year's basketball team, agrees that her schedule is demanding, but says "it helps me balance my school work."

Being on a young team in a tough league doesn't make things any easier. But although the team is winless in league play so far this year, she says "there's great camaraderie being a part of the team, and it's still a lot of fun. We do it for the love of basketball."

Life for male athletes is just as tough. Mike Rys, a fourth-year sociology student, plays on the Rugby team, which won its division title this year, though it lost in the playoffs.

"I wasn't prepared for the level of play when I first came to Carleton," he admits. "It's quite a big jump from high school."

He says the main piece of advice he would give someone thinking of coming to play a varsity sport is "be prepared. You can't expect to have a social life, keep up with your school work, and play varsity sports. You have to make some sacrifices."

Coaches recognize the importance of having their athletes learn to manage their schedules, and most will provide help and guidance, says John Wilson, coordinator of men's varsity sports. He notes the football program even involves Counselling services in organizing time management and study skills sessions for the athletes.

Pressure to recruit

Other than the love of the sport and the enjoyment they get from playing, Ontario university athletes can't expect any perks. They aren't eligible for athletic scholarships, or even a job on campus that isn't also available to non-varsity athletes.

When it comes to recruiting new student athletes, this puts Ontario universities at a disadvantage compared to universities in eastern or western Canada, where scholarships are offered. And make no mistake about it, competition for student athletes is fierce.

Most recruiting is done by coaches through their own networks and personal contacts, but also in conjunction with the student liaison office. Mr. Harris says that recruiting is such a big factor today that coaches are talking about burnout, and the football conference has decided to try a moratorium on off-campus recruiting in June and July just to give the coaches a break.

Even with the moratorium, things are heating up in this area. Queen's and McGill have decided to extend their recruitment efforts to Western Canada, prompting western universities to lift restrictions they had on recruiting out of their area. As well, while Ontario universities are prohibited from paying travel expenses to bring new students to their campus, the practice is common among universities in eastern Canada.

Along with increased emphasis on recruiting, Mr. Harris has seen other changes in varsity sports over the years. The calibre of play is higher, he says, but fewer athletes play in more than one sport because the schedules are longer and often overlap. Athletes have to train year-round, and increasingly, there are more full-time coaches.

Alumni get involved

A new trend at Carleton has been the emergence of alumni chapters to support varsity sports. While the Old Crow Society has a long tradition associated with football, alumni chapters have recently been established for basketball and even hockey, which no longer has varsity status.

The newest chapter is for swimming, which is also the first co-ed sports chapter. Tom Anzai, BCom/84, a former Raven swimmer who heads the chapter, says it was formed to maintain friendship ties among former team players, and also to give something back to the University.

The basketball chapter, headed by Jack McAuley, BA/74, formed for similar reasons, and now helps raise funds for team equipment, sponsors tournaments, and organizes social programs.

Mr. Wilson says alumni involvement is an important adjunct to the department's program. "It keeps traditions alive, and is great for the athletes. They like to see former players come out and support them."

Panda tradition

When it comes to varsity sports traditions at Carleton, indeed in Canada, nothing compares to the Panda Game. But after years of attracting in excess of 10,000 fans, the game has been languishing over the past several years, ever since fans were injured when a guard rail at Lansdowne Park gave way.

Since then, costs for security and cleanup, and scheduling headaches with Lansdowne Park, have been major hurdles to organizing the game. Now it looks like some of those problems may be in the past.

Mr. Harris says the Panda Game has been scheduled for Sunday, September 11 (last year, the game wasn't scheduled until August). This coincides with Prep Week at Carleton, giving the game a decided student focus. Eventually, he hopes to see the game scheduled for late September, and to get the city, local businesses, and alumni more involved.

There's no doubt that having a strong varsity tradition, especially with a winning team, can boost a school's profile and image, as well as its spirit and morale. Still, as Gail Blake puts it, perhaps we shouldn't be asking what varsity sports can do for the school, but rather the reverse: "We should provide opportunities for students to compete against other schools at a high level, to include sport as part of their life at university, and to develop friendships."

Judging from what's happening at Carleton today, the University has come a long way to fulfilling that ideal.

Carleton's calendar crusader

by Michael Makin

If you have attended any of Carleton's Homecoming weekends during the last 40 years, it no doubt has happened to you.

It may have been at a Chancellor's Brunch or at an English recital, at a class reunion, at this year's Animal Dance, or even while innocently en route to the washroom when you first experienced it—a close encounter with Carleton's Calendar Crusader.

You probably were minding your own business at the time, when out of nowhere, you were approached by a man with briefcase in tow, filled with newspaper clippings, and with a mission to change the world; at least with the way it registers time.

His name is Maurice Freedman and for as long as anyone at Carleton can remember this BCom/49 grad has promoted the adoption of a new calendar at every opportunity that presents itself.

He calls his invention the Tranquillity Calendar, and it is designed to replace the current Gregorian calendar, which itself was designed in 1582 to correct the Julian calendar, which was designed in 46 B.C. to correct the Roman calendar.

Why all the fuss with calendars and why has this 75-year-old retired systems analyst from the Canadian Navy spent the better part of his adult life pitching what to most is a peculiar proposal?

Well, according to Maurice, the world would be a much nicer place with his calendar marking the passage of time, the benefits of which would range from greater peace on earth to standardizing fiscal quarters for businesses to more efficiently tracking menstrual cycles for the rhythm method (even though this form of birth control was obviously more popular in the Roman era than at present). Nonetheless, Maurice insists that "women are vitally concerned with the calendar" and would be much better off using his.

If all this sounds like something the Natural Law party would espouse in addition to yogic flying, you ain't heard nothing yet.

Sitting down with Maurice for an interview I was given the basics in calendars and how they operate. I have lost little sleep since the experience.

In Maurice's Tranquillity Calendar, each month would have 30 days, except for December which would have 35 days, except in a leap year when it would have 36. This would be much more straightforward I'm told. There would be no confusion with holidays because they would always be on fixed dates in this system and there would be a longer period between Christmas and New Years.

Of course proposing such a radical change as calendar reform is easier said than done. It requires nothing less than getting the majority of the 26-member General Committee of the United Nations to approve of the idea and place it on the Assembly's agenda where issues such as political sanctions and wars generally take precedence.

Needless to say, if you think Maurice is a familiar face around Carleton, he has become almost part of the furniture at the U.N. where he has personally promoted his calendar for more than a quarter-century, lobbying all 150 U.N. Ambassadors and the Secretary General himself. It helps that he and his wife Molly have lived in New York City since 1952, where the often daily trek for the septuagenarian with the stamina of a stallion can be taken with relative ease from "Tranquillity Headquarters," a small, city-subsidized hotel room in Manhattan, located close to the Empire State Building.

It should surprise no one that Maurice hasn't confined his calendar crusade to Carleton Homecomings or the U.N. He has written all U.S. Senators, the 50 American Governors, the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Canada, and the Vatican urging that political leaders around the world adopt his time measurement piece and, "join together in a major step that shows the advancement of their intelligence." This may be expecting too much from politicians, but Maurice is not easily deterred.

Molly and Maurice Freedman

Maybe this explains why he and Molly have left nothing to chance and have embarked on a number of "Tranquillity Tours"—cross-country campaigns to drum up interest in their calendar. Usually travelling by bus where they can sleep on board to save expenses, the Freedmans have taken their labour of love to every U.S. State and all Canadian provinces and have literally dozens of news clippings to show for it. If you've ever met Maurice, you probably have already seen these. Perhaps he has given you copies.

In the process, Maurice Freedman has undoubtedly become the most famous (if not infamous) export of Sioux Lookout in northwestern Ontario.

He is certainly one of the most interesting individuals I have ever met.

I know I'll never look at a calendar again without thinking of him and I hope that after a lifetime of tireless effort he gets his wish and that the U.N. indeed adopts his cherished invention by the time he and Molly celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary on August 10, 1995. He deserves this date with destiny. It's one already marked on my calendar. 🐦

Life insurance plan for alumni

The Alumni Association at Carleton, with the support of the University office of Development and Alumni Services, has introduced a number of services for alumni over the past several years. These include the Carleton Mastercard, the new University wine introduced in the spring, the Convocation framing project, and other services which offer unique deals to graduates of Carleton University. In this and future issues of the magazine these services will be profiled.

by Mary Huband

In 1987, the Alumni Council endorsed a plan with the North American Life Assurance Company which would provide group insurance coverage for graduates of the University at discounted rates. That year, 31 grads joined the plan, paying an average annual premium of $170. They joined alumni from 16 other universities in Canada who also enjoyed the benefits of group insurance, which at the same time returned a portion of profits to the universities. Since that time Carleton's participation has grown each year, and North American Life has added a number of no-cost improvements to our grads.

By the fifth anniversary of the plan in 1992, some 380 Carleton grads owned policies, with premiums totalling well over $100,000. That brought annual revenue to the University of over $4,000. As of December 31, 1993, there were more than 500 Carleton alumni and spouses in the plan, with annual premiums totalling $122,000.

Carleton markets the service through ads in Carleton University Magazine, by a general mailing every few years, and by an information brochure in the package of material sent by Development and Alumni Services to every "new" grad after the spring and fall Convocations.

The local (Ottawa) agent for the North American Plan is Bob Sonier, Vice-President, Seabury and Smith Limited. He works closely with the Alumni Office and North American Life to ensure that correct information is available and that Carleton grads are getting the best deal possible.

Mr. Sonier believes that North American Life offers the best group plan for grads. In the spring, a review of the Carleton plan was carried out and a comparison made with universities which used other insurers. Carleton stayed with North American Life.

Enhanced Coverage

This year, the company has elevated Carleton to what agents call their "large university pool." With this elevation comes enhanced coverage at no cost to the subscriber, greater diversity in optional coverage, and of course a better deal for the University. Now, subscribers may purchase a maximum of 16 units of coverage (up from 12) at $33,000 per unit (this is an increase of $3,000 per unit). New "living benefit" coverage is offered to terminally ill policy holders, and income protection insurance has been added as an option.

As for the University, returns from this service in the first five years amounted to over $15,000. With our elevation to the large

Branching Out

Calgary

by Fiona Campbell, BAHons/90

Here in Calgary we are still trying valiantly to contact as many Carleton alumni as possible. At last count we had over 1,000 alumni in Calgary alone! We are also actively looking for people who are interested in getting involved with the Alumni Association Organizational Committee.

We are currently in the process of planning two events in the New Year. The first is a Pan-Alumni Skating Party that will take place March 6, 1994 at the Olympic Oval. Carleton Alumni and their families are invited to attend for an afternoon of skating and hot chocolate. Alumni Associations from 24 other universities will also be attending. Our second event will involve president Robin Farquhar and is also scheduled for early spring. This event will take place after work. Watch your mail for details.

If you are interested in helping with the organization of either of these events, or would simply like more information about the Carleton Alumni Association in Calgary, please contact Fiona Campbell at 251-3823.

Toronto

Toronto Alumni got together at the Amsterdam Pub to enjoy a few brew prior to the Vanier Cup on Saturday, November 20, 1993. Later that day, alumni marched onto the Skydome field as part of the Alumni Parade of Colours accompanied by a very exuberant Rodney Raven, Carleton's mascot. Thanks go to Tracy Hall BA/87, for her hard work and efforts.

Victoria

by Norine Gilkinson, BA/78

On October 27, a very successful and enjoyable high school recruitment evening was held at the Harbour Towers Hotel in downtown Victoria.

Parents and students attended to see the slides that were presented by Kim McCuaig, Development and Alumni director, and Lori Fielding, branches and chapters officer. Frank, BCom/76, and Alice, BA/77, Campbell, and Richard Gelder, BAHons/92, were on hand representing the graduates of Carleton. Informal conversation and refreshments were the relaxing final touch of this evening for approximately 35 people.

Victoria is fortunate to have graduates of all ages attend these functions, and support Carleton's image with their great enthusiasm.

Montreal

The Montreal Branch has a new President, Pam Pavlik. Pam is the third president, after Don Climo, the original president, and Marvin Epstein, who led the branch for the last three years. Both past presidents continue to be active.

In April, Pam and Marvin are organizing a billiards night which promises to be a lot of fun; in June, Marvin (who is devoted to the game) will run a golf tournament; and in July the branch will hold yet another Send Off night for new Carleton students and their parents. Montreal grads will hear more of these events in the near future.

The branch held a dinner and comedy night at Beezer's and the Comedy Works in January, and like last year, it was a hit.

More events will be planned for our eager grads to round out the year.

Alumni enjoyed the beautiful surroundings of the historic Reading Room at a Christmas Dinner Dance held on Parliament Hill, November 27.

National Capital

by Mike Makin, BJ/86

The National Capital Branch celebrated the festivities of the holidays with two special events in November and December. On November 27th, the Branch held its first [annual?] Christmas Dinner Dance on Parliament Hill in the historic Reading Room of the Centre Block. 60 Alumni attended. On December 8th Branch President Mike Makin and his wife Maureen held a Christmas Reception at their home where close to 30 branch members toasted the season. All Ottawa alumni are encouraged to get involved with the branch.

Winnipeg

by Zbigniew Gryz, MA/73, PhD/80

The Winnipeg Branch of the Alumni Association was very pleased to help the University with its High School Recruitment Night on November 15, 1993.

Some 20 to 25 students showed up at the Delta Winnipeg Hotel to hear Kim McKuaig, Director of Development and Alumni Services and Lori Fielding, Branches and Chapters Coordinator, provide a masterful presentation on the charm and many benefits of an education at Carleton University.

The lively and keen discussion that followed was greatly enhanced by the contributions of two fairly recent Carleton graduates: Scott Dippel, BJ/86, of CBC Radio, and Angela Davis, BCom/91, of Deloitte and Touche. A special thanks to these two for their valued contribution.

Invitations will be sent out in the new year to all Carleton University Alumni in the Winnipeg area for a Wine and Cheese Social. The event is being organized by Angela Davis and will give us an opportunity to meet one another in a relaxed atmosphere and make new friends.

We would like very much to hold two to four functions per year for Carleton Alumni in the Winnipeg area. We have given thought to a variety of functions, such as social gatherings, speakers, a newsletter, and so on. However, we would encourage anyone who has an interest in this, or has some ideas to suggest, or would simply like to help out, to please contact either Zbigniew (Zbig) at 947-1547 or Angela Davis at 942-0051.

Bald Ravens

by Paul Correy, BEng/74

The 1993-'94 Alumni game and dinner was held on Friday October 22, 1993 as part of Carleton's Homecoming Weekend.

Carleton's Hockey Alumni, 1960-'92, now known as the Bald Ravens met with this year's edition of the Student Hockey Club at the R.A. Centre in an exhibition of skill (students) versus fatigue (bald ones). The game almost turned into a rout for the alumni snipers who held a 4-1 lead after the first half. However, after a brief intermission the students stormed back to snatch a 6-4 victory away from the leg-weary alumni.

Some of the notables in the alumni lineup included Mike Berry, Mark Ronayne, Tom Legget (1963 Captain), Randy McCaan, Dave Smith, Stephen Wormith, Bernie Ingimundson, Bob Eccles and Paul Godkey.

Strong goal tending was a vital part of alumni coach John Hagglund's strategy. The Alumni's three man rotation featured Doug Rankin (1975), John Haines (1968) and young Ryan Dawson (1992).

Familiar faces in the R.A. Centre bleachers included the late Doug Drummond's wife Linda, who travelled from South Carolina for the game and Class of 1968 reunion, and John Wilson who is now with Carleton Athletics.

Following the game a reception and roast beef buffet dinner was held at Carleton's Faculty Club. Approximately 50 alumni and 20 students from this year's club team met over dinner.

Several players from Carleton's 1968-'69 and 1970-'71 OUAA League Championship Teams attended including: Terry McCarthy, captain 1971-'72; Derek Holmes 1970-'71, a member of Canada's National Team; Tom Barkley, fifth in Raven scoring; Myles Harrigan; Bill McDonnell; Doug Harper; and Randy Crickmore.

Graduates attending from the 1989-'92 club teams included John MacBeth, the 1989 Captain instrumental in assisting the alumni bid to bring back the ravens; and Mike Yaworski, the spiritual leader of the 1991 and 1992 Clubs. This group was well represented by a core group of players who provided their own equipment, drove to games in beat up cars without heaters, and still managed to win 65 percent of their games against university and senior teams over the four-year period.

Seated at the head table were Head Coach George Brown and his wife Sandy, Assistant Coach Yuriy Chewpa and his wife Marie, Assistant Coach Chuck Wight, and General Manager Paul Correy and his wife Donna.

John MacBeth, a 1991 graduate, concluded the evening by thanking the hockey alumni for their financial and administrative support over the past four seasons, and for bringing the ghost of hockey back to Carleton.

Vancouver

by Jennifer Higgins-Ingham, BAHons/92

The Vancouver Alumni Branch held the second annual Pre-Christmas Cheer Bash at the Elephant & Castle pub in downtown Vancouver. Over 40 alumni, friends and spouses attended the ever-popular meet-and-greet. Everyone enjoyed some fine Christmas cheer and the opportunity to see old friends and meet new friends. It was a very successful event and enjoyed by everyone. A special thanks to Laura Pasmore, BA/81, for organizing a great event.

The event provided the opportunity for alumni, following the ever-increasing trend of migration to Vancouver, to meet established Vancouverites and discuss the enjoyable warm Christmas winters, while comparing notes about friends still in Ottawa. Also the Branch's past president, Jennifer Yolland, BCom/85, made the discovery that the mailing list did not include certain suburbs of Vancouver. Therefore our branch is growing and we hope to reach more alumni for the next event.

Edmonton

by Patti Cooper, BA/69

The Edmonton Branch hosted an evening for high school students interested in Carleton University on November 2. This was a first for our group and it seemed to be very well received by the high school community, teachers and parents. We look forward to hosting this event next year.

Following that event, a Billiards evening was held at the Paladium Club in downtown Edmonton. The tournament was a great success. Everyone received a prize - even the "rookies." One of the stars was none other than Carleton's resident pool shark, President Robin Farquhar.

The New Year lends itself to a gathering and the general consensus is to get together for wine and cheese. Details will follow once the "spirited" committee members have made further arrangements!

English

by Christine Fisher, MA/77

When the English grads came out in unprecedented numbers to the Carleton University Art Gallery for a reception on Friday, March 12, 1993, we realized that we would like to see each other more often and agreed that the time had come to organize our own chapter within the Alumni Association.

On Homecoming Weekend in October, after an English Department reunion in the Faculty Club, a small dedicated band, including Sandra Gratton, BAHons/78, CTESL/79, who had come over from England for the weekend, trooped over to the Loeb Building to hear the Munro Beattie Lecture. We had planned to return to the Faculty Club afterwards for readings, reminiscences and a birthday cake for Professor Beattie. Unfortunately wires got severely crossed at this late stage of the evening. We returned to the Faculty Club to find it locked. Thus a new set of plans were made to meet again before the year was out, and so we did, on Friday, December 3, 1993 in the Art's Faculty Lounge on the 20th floor of the Davidson Dunton Tower.

Dr. Beattie started off the evening with readings from the works of his fellow professor emeritus, George Johnston, and for the next two hours the talk ranged through Chaucer, Hardy and Tennyson, interspersed with anecdotes from professors Cameron, Heidemann, McLay, and Wurtele. Robert Hayman, MA/85, regaled us with his country and western parodies of some of Wordsworth's most solemn poems: "You picked a fine time to leave me, Lucy!"

A survey will be sent to all English alumni to determine the level of interest in forming our own Alumni Chapter and to gather ideas and suggestions for activities.

Public Administration

by Joanne Kennedy, MA/91

The alumni of the School of Public Administration have been busy over the past few months, with changes in the Executive, the School's 40th Anniversary Conference and preparing for a number of events for the new year.

The Alumni Executive wishes farewell and good luck to Séan Crossan, MA/92, the founder and first president of the Public Administration Alumni Association. Séan will remain involved in the Alumni as a volunteer, but will be exercising his administrative skills in the organization of his upcoming wedding. All the best Séan!

In October, the School of Public Administration celebrated its 40th Anniversary with great success. The School held a conference at the Château Laurier which consisted of a Wine and Cheese, hosted by the Alumni, and a Socratic Dialogue, scripted and organized by the School. The entire weekend received rave reviews. In particular, the Socratic Dialogue was a resounding success. About 100 people gave rapt attention to the proceedings as they unfolded over the two-and-a-half hour event. Moderator Eric Malling, BJ/68, took the likes of Arthur Kroeger, Maureen O'Neil, BA/64, Hugh Segal and Gene Swimmer on a roller coaster ride as they were forced to make instant decisions about whether or not to inform the minister and prime minister of the existence of a contentious report; how to cope with a U.S. president anxious about the contents of the report; and how to deal with the ensuing brouhaha. The entire event will be broadcast across Canada via the Canadian Parliamentary Channel's cable network. The success of the Socratic Dialogue was so far reaching that the School has been approached to turn the video material into teaching aids for the post-secondary and secondary levels. The School will also mount a second dialogue, this time with Jason Moscovitz, BJ/73, national affairs reporter for the CBC, as the moderator.

This year, the Alumni held its annual J.W. Pickersgill speakers series in tandem with the School of Public Administration in order to further celebrate the School's 40th Anniversary. The joint function was a debate on Development Aid. The Debate was held on Friday, January 28th, at the Minto Centre at Carleton University, at 8:00 pm. Debaters included the likes of Manfred Bienefeld, professor at the Norman Patterson School of International Affairs; Maureen O'Neil, president of the North-South Institute; and Timothy Pluntre, president of the Institute on Governance. Robin Farquhar, president of Carleton University was the moderator. The event will be televised by the Canadian Parliamentary Channel.

The Public Administration Alumni Association's fourth year of operation promises to be an exciting one. The success of the events carried out by the Alumni Association are due to the great work by its volunteers. As always, we would like to thank our volunteers for all their hard work, and we would like to encourage any alumni who would be interested in helping out in future events to give us a call.

Growing up with Carleton

by Jon Love

When asked to contribute to "Carleton Recollections" a feeling of panic came over me. I initially thought what they wanted was a recounting of my academic prowess ... no, that couldn't be it, they wanted more than 25 words! I was relieved to find out what they really wanted was my recollections of my experience, as a whole, from my days at Carleton.

Actually, my recollections of Carleton go back much farther than my attendance as a student/athlete during the mid '70s. Being the second youngest of six children to attend Carleton, and being the son of a faculty member, my memories of Carleton started significantly younger than most. Memories of my eldest brothers, David, BA/69, and Chris, BSc/71, coming home from their respective "frosh" parades down Bank street, black and red beanies, face paint, different shoes... remember those parades? Even before then, as a very young boy, spending Saturday mornings playing in the corner of a laboratory while my father (Ross of the Physics Department), and several other members of faculty "played with machines from outer space." We then went on a long journey along a rushing river, over boulders and across fields (the campus seemed so big to me then), only to be almost run over by a train before reaching our destination.

We finally came to an open area where "millions" of people were screaming, yelling and making a big fuss over a stuffed toy dangling from a wire up in the air suspended from two huge light standards. I realized much later that this was just "Panda-monium." Such are the memories of a young child, but, who can forget Panda weekend. There is no other event quite like it. It will be a shame if Panda dies!

Later, I recall my first days on campus as a student, registering, getting lost in the tunnels, lining up to buy books ... we all did it. Then the realization that I really didn't know anyone. This was a big place and I had that sinking feeling of being in Grade Nine all over again. A few weeks later I tried out for the men's varsity basketball team. I had been a high school player locally, but quite frankly was not prepared for what I was about to get into... literally a boy against men. It honestly scared me how big and strong these people were. I was fortunate to have Drew, (my next eldest brother), BA/78, MA/84, MBA/85 (Ottawa), playing for the team, and he helped me through the first-year jitters. Varsity basketball at 6'2" and only 147 pounds (we were not metric then), was not all that easy.

That first year was a blur. Being on the road every other weekend (we didn't do that in high school), was a draining experience. Nor was I prepared for the freedom university life had to offer... "You mean you don't take attendance, sir?" Suffice it to say it took me five years to get that Honours B.A., but as they say "Hey, it's not a race." I hung in there and eventually the "bone-rack" filled out a little over time. I had some wonderful successes, and some failures too, on and off the basketball court, and got that elusive degree. I would be lying if I said it was all fun, it was not. Injuries really do hurt, practices are seldom fun, but the relationships that you develop in these settings really do last a lifetime.

Although there are several individual moments I could recount, I have grown to realize that what I remember the most is that I was very fortunate to be associated with the people that helped me through those years. It was indeed a privilege to be a part of those teams and to be at Carleton in the '70s (before Macleans... boy are they wrong!), and if I only realized then what I know now, I would have thanked them properly. Maybe this is a little late, but thanks all!

Friendships that developed with teammates, coaches, managers, trainers and faculty members have lasted until today. I see many of these people regularly through our basketball alumni association and other events both on and off campus. This is a unique opportunity to say "Hi" to those of you that I have lost touch with over the years.

Kenneth G. Roberts, BJ/48, has completed his fourth book since retirement. The Way It Was is a long narrative poem on bomber operations in World War II, large segments of which were written in the heat of the battle with 158 Squadron in Yorkshire.

Fifties

Gerald C. Arnold, BCom/53, retired in June 1992 after 33 years as information services vice-president with Confederation Life. He is doing part-time consulting in the financial services industry.

Vic Hryhorchuk, BA/53, retired from the Hamilton/Burlington YMCA, where he worked as chief executive officer for 17 years. He started working for the YMCA more than 40 years ago in Ottawa after graduating from Carleton. In 1963, Vic was involved in one of the first YMCA youth exchanges between Canada and the former Soviet Union.

Carleton graduate receives rare distinction

by Douglas Wurtele

A well-known Carleton graduate, Michael Moore, BAHons/69, MA/70, PhD (Queen's), professor of English at Wilfrid Laurier University, has won a 3M Canada Teaching Fellowship. Awarded by the Society for Teaching and Learning in High Education, this distinction is granted to only 10 nominees a year. It recognizes not simply outstanding teaching but, equally important, service to the profession by way of theory and development in new pedagogical ideas. The year before, he received Laurier's Outstanding Teaching Award and has also received a Lieutenant Governor's Award for Teaching Excellence.

Mike Moore was a familiar figure on the Carleton campus from the mid-'60s to the early '70s and has since maintained close personal and professional ties. He attained his Honours BA in English in 1969 and his MA in 1970. By then it was obvious he would soon become a first-rate university teacher and scholar. His MA thesis, of scope and depth equivalent today to doctoral standards, earned him, before entering the Queen's PhD program, a place in the office of the late John Ruptash. The then new Dean of Graduate Studies and Research was transforming his operation into a full-fledged faculty, and Mike was his first assistant. This experience, too, helped shape his career, for in 1992 Mike became assistant dean of graduate studies at Laurier.

After completing doctoral work, Mike and his wife, Patty (McCarthy), BA/68, and their growing family, spent several years in Alberta. By the time he began his career at Laurier, his own writing powers had established him to be remarkably successful as a teacher of writing as well as literature. He soon produced a new edition of the well-respected manual, A Writer's Handbook of Current English. Subsequent publications have gained him equal renown as a scholar in Hopkins and Newman Studies.

The latest issue of University Affairs stresses the value of good teaching in universities. All of us at Carleton take real pride in the fact that one of our own has shown us how dedication and hard work can achieve that ideal.

Serve a wine with class

The Carleton University Alumni Association proudly presents a selection of award-winning wines by Château des Charmes.

Pinot Noir features an attractive, deep crimson robe, with a vibrant aroma of black currants overlaid by smooth and complex oak vanillins.

Seyval Blanc features a brilliant, limpid, pale yellow robe, with a clean, dry finish, and a firm body and character in the "Muscadet" tradition.

Both wines are bottled with the Carleton University Special Select label displaying the University's new coat of arms. They may be purchased at Château des Charmes outlets in Ontario (Ottawa, Toronto, Oakville and St. Davids winery) and are attractively priced at $8.95 per bottle for the Seyval Blanc and $9.95 per bottle for the Pinot Noir. As well, they can be ordered by cases of twelve for shipping anywhere in Canada (shipping costs are extra) by telephoning 1-800-263-2541.
